

COLON CANCER

According to the American Cancer Society, more than 148,000 new cases of colon cancer will be diagnosed in the United States this year, resulting in more than 55,000 deaths. These statistics make colon cancer the second leading cause of cancer-related death in the United States.

When the colon is not functioning properly, effects can be felt in other associated organs. Thus, many illnesses can be caused by an unhealthy colon or can be prevented by maintaining a healthy colon.

Years of ineffective elimination will result in the colon becoming burdened with an accumulation of waste material: impacted feces, bacteria, fungi, viruses, parasites, and dead cellular material. The result is bowel toxemia. This buildup creates several problems for the body.

First, these toxins in the colon re-enter the bloodstream, creating illness, weakness and fatigue. Second, impacted waste impairs the colon's ability to do its job (i.e. assimilate minerals). Also, this congestion inhibits the normal necessary muscular action of the colon, causing sluggish bowel movements, constipation and related disorders.

Health experts recommend eating foods that are high in fiber, at least five servings of fresh fruits and vegetables per day. (The average American consumes only about three vegetables a day.) Flushing toxins and routine colon screenings are recommended to keep the colon healthy. In addition, drinking Tyent Water™ is an excellent way to help flush your system.
